2019 Product Liability & Complex Torts Practice Group Seminar

September 25-27, 2019

Ritz-Carlton, Dove Mountain
Marana, Arizona

Are you ready for the changes in technology, discovery practices, and substantive law that impact your business? The beautiful Ritz-Carlton, Dove Mountain in Marana, Arizona is the perfect venue to prepare yourself for the legal changes that are coming upon us fast and furious. Our cutting-edge presentations will give you the tools to stay one step ahead, and to navigate an ever-changing terrain.

In the past twelve months, we have seen a succession of jaw-dropping jury verdicts against corporations in product liability cases. Given this troubling trend, it seems fitting to kick off our program with a general session addressing why jury verdicts against corporations are through the roof and what can be done to level the playing field.

Conference attendees will then be able to pick and choose among nine breakout sessions addressing current issues in three separate tracks.

- Technology
European data protection laws
"Smart" interconnected products
Cybersecurity
- Discovery
Spoliation of physical evidence
Offensive and defensive use of social media
Impact of the current administration's policies on your business
- Substantive Law
Post-sale obligation to warn
Challenges in combatting evidence of a feasible alternative design
Combatting counterfeit and grey market sales

This year, we are also introducing the following brand-new programs:

- TED-style talks delivered by valued industry leaders
- A hot-topics-in-product-liability session addressing hot-off-the-press new developments you need to know
- An ethics session focusing on best practices to counter plaintiffs' efforts to undermine the attorney-client privilege

Each day, we will conclude early in the afternoon to give conference attendees a break from the classroom and an opportunity to network with colleagues and enjoy the beauty that is Dove Mountain. Be sure to sign up for one the offered activities on Friday afternoon and join us for a farewell dinner that evening.

Welcome again to the 2019 ALFA International Product Liability and Complex Torts Practice Group Seminar. We look forward to seeing you in the desert!

Corporations in the Crosshairs: Strategies to Decrease the Likelihood that Your Company Will be the Next Headline

Ritz Carlton Plazas 1&2

In today's world of social media and "fake news," deregulation, and corporate distrust, a defendant corporation faces many new challenges in litigation. In response to this evolution, all players on the defense must take steps to mitigate the risk of becoming the recipient of the next big verdict. While no one can prevent a jury from doing something crazy, this panel will discuss strategies to mitigate the risk that your company will fall victim to an out-of-control jury.

A → Don't Get Caught in the Net: The New Rules Affecting All Companies on Privacy, Data Collection and Retention

As the giants of the tech world accumulate (and in many cases share) user information, some jurisdictions are starting to constrain these efforts with laws and regulations. Not surprisingly, these rules are also affecting ordinary manufacturers and retailers who are located, or who do business with individuals who are located, in the affected jurisdictions. While this began with the EU, data protection laws or regulations have now been adopted in a number of other countries and, starting in 2020, in California. This program will address the now-effective EU General Data Protection Regulations (GDPR), the California Consumer Privacy Act (CCPA), as well as other efforts inside and outside the US.

Plaintiffs, their lawyers and experts frequently have exclusive access to critical evidence in a product liability case long before defendants are even notified of an incident, and often continue to have physical control of that evidence during litigation. What happens when critical evidence is destroyed, altered or discarded, either intentionally or unintentionally? And what are the most effective strategies for defendants for preserving critical evidence, both prior to and during litigation?

Virtually every product liability defendant has experienced the frustration of having to respond to a plaintiff’s expert with no “hands-on” experience with a subject product hypothesizing about a so-called “better” design that the expert believes would have prevented an accident. GENERAL SESSION: TED TALKS

Join a panel of seasoned in-house counsel from varied industries for a spirited discussion of some “ideas worth spreading” as we explore and learn the client perspective on issues equally important to clients and the outside lawyers who represent them in high-stakes litigation. Moderated by past Product Liability and Complex Tort Practice Group Chair Kevin Owens of Johnson & Bell, Ltd., attendees will leave this presentation with fresh perspectives and insights on issues that both clients and their outside counsel sometimes take for granted.

THE TOP 10 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW TO TALK TO MY BUSINESS PEOPLE

Outside counsel are accustomed to talking with their in-house counterparts on the details of a pending lawsuit or transactional matter on a “lawyer-to-lawyer” basis. However, outside counsel’s interactions with the client’s non-legal staff can take on an entirely different dimension. Erin Rolstad of Silver Creek Midstream LLC will share her insights on how outside counsel can better serve the client in discussions with the client’s non-legal, business personnel, and how in-house counsel can better facilitate those conversations.

THINGS I WISH MY OUTSIDE COUNSEL KNEW BUT THEY NEVER ASK (INNER VOICES OF AN IN-HOUSE COUNSEL)

Even seasoned outside counsel can take for granted considerations that are significant to their in-house counterparts in the law departments of their clients both large and small. Does outside counsel assume that the company is experienced with high-stakes litigation? Is counsel sensitive to the demands on the client’s time, particularly with respect to the client’s business and in-house engineering personnel? Nicole Brunson of Ingersoll Rand will let her inner voice on these issues be heard! Her perspectives will be of value to both in-house counsel and the outside lawyers who serve them.

FINANCIAL CHALLENGES FACING IN-HOUSE COUNSEL: WHAT IT’S LIKE TO BE US

Whether it is a Fortune 50 company or a “mom and pop” operation, in-house counsel are constantly being asked to do more with less. Budgets, restrictions on legal spending, forecasting future legal spending, case evaluations...these issues are now more than ever part of in-house counsel’s daily life. Ed Blakemore of Rockwell Automation will offer his perspective on these challenges in order to help outside counsel better understand those demands, and to help bring them into better focus for in-house counsel.

Data is an extremely valuable asset that must be protected for both business reasons and regulatory compliance. Cybersecurity is much more than requiring a password to access a system or information; it is an evolving system of digital and physical protections that are documented in a written plan that is tested, implemented through regular training, updated regularly, and insured appropriately. This session will explore some of the current best practices used by companies and law firms to provide cybersecurity for their own data as well as information entrusted to them by clients and business partners.

B → Outside Influences on Your Business and Litigation—Including Tort Reform, Governmental Policies and Shifting Political Priorities

Every successful business has to nimbly anticipate or react to changes in conditions, and some of the most dramatic of those changes in recent years have come from sources other than target consumers: Tort reform efforts around the country have changed litigation playing fields and require informed analysis by trial counsel Governmental policies – particularly at the national level – create challenges for businesses trying to anticipate regulatory reform, as well as for their advising counsel Tariffs, immigration reform, real or perceived diplomatic crises, and other ‘news of the day’ have very real effects on day to day business decisions This panel will discuss and explore the influence of outside forces on business and litigation, both in the short and long term, and what companies and their outside counsel can do to cope with those changing winds and choppy seas.
